Typical uses of Byrne funds

Funds can be requested for a variety of uses:
- travel to conferences or workshops
- participation in internships, REUs, and similar training opportunities outside of Dartmouth
- books or software for research projects

Even though funds are primarily meant to support off-campus activities, it is possible to apply for funds to support research on campus during an off-term. In this case, we require a letter of support from a local research mentor/sponsor outlining the project the scholar intends to pursue. Byrne funds may be used to cover Dartmouth’s housing and dining plans in an off-term, but they can’t be used for stipends.

The website https://math.dartmouth.edu/wp/byrne/ provides examples of how Byrne scholars have used funds in the past.

In addition to individual Byrne Scholar enrichment funds, the department uses programmatic Byrne funds to provide infrastructure to support Byrne Scholar activities on campus, such as sponsored speakers, Byrne Scholar gatherings, and the use of Kemeny 121 as the Byrne Scholar common area. Suggestions for other such activities are welcome, and they do not require this application form.

Reimbursement process

Budgetary expenditures are typically reimbursed after the scholar returns to campus and submits all the proper receipts to Tracy Moloney (Kemeny 104C). Scholars can arrange to have some items paid in advance of the activity as described below, but funds will not be issued directly to Byrne Scholars:
• Non-travel items may be purchased with a department purchasing card.
• Conference registration fees may be paid with a department purchasing card.
• Airfare can be booked directly through the college travel office (Travel Leaders), in which case Tracy Moloney will need to notify them first with the billing information.

All other travel expenses, such as lodging, ground transportation and meals, will be paid by the Scholar and submitted for reimbursement afterwards.

Please do not incur in any expenditures before your application has been approved. The Byrne Advisors may request additional information before deciding on your application.

Post-activity report

Upon completion of the activity, the Scholar will submit a short (1-2 paragraph) description of the experience to the Byrne Advisor. These summaries are public, may be posted on the Byrne Scholar website, and are meant to give future scholars a sense of what others have accomplished with their enrichment funds. Further funding for the Byrne Scholar is contingent on submitting this summary.
